

Classical Cottage School, Inc.

Our Mission

The Classical Cottage School is a non-denominational Christian consortium whose mission is to equip students with the tools of learning through a careful implementation of classical studies in the Grammar, Logic, and Rhetoric stages of development.

Our Philosophy

Modern education sees learning as an accumulation of facts; it is content-driven but skills deficient. Many children don't know what to do with the information they have. The results include an inability to order thoughts and to think clearly or independently. At the Classical Cottage School, we believe the most important curriculum is that which develops the skills of independent learning and equips students for a lifetime of inquiry and growth. A true classical education does not accomplish education through subjects but uses those subjects as a way to build the skills for becoming a lifelong learner. We believe that too many subjects will crowd out the skill building that needs to take place.

The core courses in our school will be those Liberal Arts classes that develop critical learning skills, as once taught by the Greeks and by Renaissance scholars. These thinking skills are taught carefully and incrementally in correlation with three major stages of intellectual development:

- 1) Grammar Stage: Before age 10, students at the Classical Cottage School focus on the grammar of language through a basic overview of Latin, English Grammar, and exposure to such living languages as French and Spanish. In addition to languages, students may participate in a Great Books Discussion class, Music, Art History, World History, and Science. A three-year Classical Studies Program that covers Ancient Greece, Ancient Rome, and Early American History is offered to older Grammar students.
- 2) Logic Stage: Students between the ages 10 and 16 are ready for intense Latin, independent writing, and Logic classes. The study of Latin in particular will develop the child's powers of memory and observation and enrich his studies of English Grammar, Ancient History, Mythology, Geography and Science. At the Classical Cottage School, we recommend that students participate in a two-year writing program called the Progymnasmata before taking our two-year formal and material Logic program. We also encourage Latin students to participate in the Junior Classical League and Certamen competitions in order to broaden their knowledge of classical history, mythology, and culture. Our beginning Omnibus classes will develop students' thinking skills through reading, analyzing and discussing literature central to Western culture from ancient through modern times.

- 3) Rhetoric Stage: Rhetoric is the art of articulating ideas for the purpose of persuasion. Students who have followed the curricula of the Grammar and Logic stages will be ready for this level of academics between ages 14 and 18. Latin, Logic, and Progymnasmata courses serve as the foundation for our two-year Rhetoric program. Other offerings include A.P. American Government, A.P. Latin, American History, World History, Art History, Shakespeare, Philosophy, and Omnibus classes from level IV through VI.

An Analysis of Our Choices

Does this sound like more than your child can do? It might be if you try to overlay these classes with an already-packed curriculum. These courses deserve to be, along with Bible, Math and History, at the center of your curriculum. Classes such as Latin will cover much more than Latin Grammar—students will learn English Grammar, Ancient History, Mythology, Classical Literature, and Roman Culture and may choose to participate in local, state, and national contests. We strongly advise families to cut back on other academics at home. Give your students the time necessary to benefit from our core classes. This program is time-consuming now, but it will spare your child the frustration that comes from academic stagnation and the boredom that is the end product of typical, workbook-centered curricula.

Classical subjects deservedly have enjoyed a revival in interest in the past few years. There is, however, a major distinction in the way Classical Cottage School approaches these subjects. Most approaches see subjects in the way that modern education views them: as material to be covered. While covering classical subjects is an improvement over much school curricula, we think that this more common approach misses the central benefit to a classical education. Classical Cottage school sees Dorothy Sayers' emphasis on the tools of learning to be the key to all learning; these tools are what enable students of all abilities to become motivated and independent learners. Emphasizing the development of these tools necessarily means giving up less important content to focus on mastering the tools. While it may seem that this approach leaves subject material uncovered in the short term, these temporary omissions are more than compensated for by the deeper comprehension of key subjects, the mastery of which makes all future learning markedly easier.

One example of this is the study of vocabulary. Typical vocabulary study involves long, unrelated lists of words, lists that are often dutifully learned for a quiz and soon forgotten. By learning vocabulary in the context of an intensive study of Latin, students understand how words are constructed as well as how language works. This kind of analytical vocabulary study gives an exponential access to new words, one that is not dependent on yet another boring vocabulary list.

English words learned in this context are never forgotten, and are used fluently in all their parts of speech and with all modifying prefixes. By mastering Latin (rather than simply studying some Latin), students become attuned to nuances in English words and syntax that are accessible only through a deep grasp of grammar. Previously unfamiliar words and subtle concepts are thus rendered readily and independently comprehensible, simply on the basis of possessing the keys to language—the tools to learning.

While we see Classical Cottage School as a community where Christian children can grow strong in fellowship with their peers, our goal is to educate students in classical education so that they will be armed with an understanding of the history of the ideas upon which western civilization is built. Our classes are taught from the perspective of a biblical worldview, but we do not offer courses that involve religious teachings. Due to the wide representation of denominations in our school, that vital area of the curriculum is best addressed at home and through the families' respective churches.

For a more thorough explanation of the reasoning behind our choice of subjects, read Dorothy Sayers' essay The Lost Tools of Learning at www.gbt.org/text/sayers.html. If you read anything at all about Classical Education, make this the essay. We recommend that families reread this essay at the beginning of every school year.

Our Goals

While the primary goal of a classical education is not high academic achievement but to train students to learn independently, academic success seems to be a natural by-product. Even though our curriculum is centered on development of core skills rather than coverage of all subjects, don't be surprised when your child's mastery of subjects far exceeds that of your own public or private education. We encourage parents to attend classes with the child and experience the thrill of acquiring new skills.

In summary, the Classical Cottage Schools aims to:

- use the tools of the classical tradition to focus intently on the development of the skills of analysis, reasoning, writing, and speaking (hence Latin, Progymnasmata, Omnibus, Logic and Rhetoric)
- emphasize that with classical education “less is better”, meaning that the younger student is better off spending time in reading fine books and hearing the stories of our culture than in grinding through workbooks that really don't teach as much as they might seem.
- emphasize depth over scope of content so that core Upper School courses really aim for mastery of key skills, which takes time and focused attention, because in developing these skills students will learn how to learn, and thereby will be motivated, competent, independent, lifelong learners.

- provide additional liberal arts courses that focus on the noble achievements of western civilization and are carefully designed for maximum effectiveness.
- provide the rich benefits that can best be achieved in courses taught by experienced, professional teachers who have extensive background in their field of study.
- challenge students by making the courses lively and inspiring.
- allow families with multiple children the opportunity to provide quality, age-appropriate instruction for both older and younger children at the same time.
- support families in their desire to school at home by keeping our courses limited to one day per week.
- encourage mothers to learn alongside their older or younger children if desired (required in the case of Latin).
- model and, when necessary, guide students in Christian principles such as humility, graciousness, and concern for others.

Please visit the “FAQs” section of our website for specific answers to frequently asked questions.

For more information on classical education, we recommend the following booklist and websites:

Books

Essay: “The Lost Tools of Learning” by Dorothy Sayers (this is foundational and not to be missed!)

Berquist, Laura. Designing Your Own Classical Curriculum

Bluedorn, Harvey & Laurie. Teaching the Trivium: Christian Homeschooling in a Classical Style

Campbell, Andrew. The Latin-Centered Curriculum.

Wilson, Douglas. Recovering the Lost Tools of Learning

Wise, Jessie & Susan Wise Bauer, The Well Trained Mind: A Guide to Classical Education at Home

Websites:

www.classical-homeschooling.org

www.classicalhomeschooling.org

www.well-trainedmind.com

www.triviumpursuit.com

www.canonpress.org

www.memoriapress.com

www.veritaspress.com